Feedback

What is constructive feedback?

Feedback aimed at achieving a positive outcome by providing someone with comments, advice, or suggestions that are actionable and useful for their work or their future.

Why is feedback important?

- Creates more meaningful relationships
- Decreases workplace conflict
- Sparks greater collaboration and innovation
- Establishes a positive work environment
- Fosters learning and agility
- Increases employee engagement
- Improves employee retention - through recognition and development
- Builds greater alignment with company goals

Quality performance and development feedback is directly correlated to employee engagement.

Gallup has found that regular feedback can increase motivation to do outstanding work by as much as 3.2x and being engaged at work by up to 2.7x.

How do I give constructive feedback?

1. Build rapport with the person you're providing feedback to.
2. Prepare for the conversation so the feedback is delivered with little judgement.
3. Give the feedback as soon as possible. Timely feedback increases impact.
4. Be honest and direct.
5. Show you care by aligning feedback to the receivers goals.
6. Be specific about the receiver's skills, strengths and what's working.
7. When giving feedback, ask questions, doing so shows you don't want a one sided conversation.
8. Ensure the feedback you are sharing is actionable so the receiver can choose to do something about it.

How do I receive feedback?

To receive feedback in the most effective way possible:

- Stay focused on the intent.
- Remain open.
- Remember it took courage for the other person to share the feedback, try not to get defensive.
- Listen carefully to what is being said and how it is said.

Make it a conversation:

- Thank the person for the feedback and tell them why it's important to you.
- Restate what you heard and ask for clarification and/or examples:
 - Can you say more about this?
 - How long have you been noticing this?
 - Where else have you seen me demonstrate this?
- Take responsibility for the impact and share your thoughts.
- Share your future focus.

Great question!

Use 2+2 conversations and performance review and development discussions to get feedback from your manager throughout the year.

In V Team Central, you can now request developmental feedback from your peers, manager, and mentors as well! (Note that this feedback should be used as part of your development planning but is not an input to performance reviews)

When you receive feedback in V Team Central, both you and your manager will be able to see it.
