What is feedback in V Team Central?

The feedback function enables Verizon employees to request, give and receive feedback to help them develop and grow. Managers may also request feedback for members of their team. Feedback is used for development purposes and not as a formal input to performance reviews.

Interns, contingent workers, associates, and temporary employees are not eligible for feedback in V Team Central.

Why do we use feedback at Verizon?

Giving and receiving feedback is key to unleashing our own and each other's potential. Feedback helps to spark greater collaboration and innovation, and fosters learning and agility.

Feedback is for sharing observations, not judging

People often think giving feedback connotes judgment or criticism, but feedback is a gift! Giving meaningful and constructive feedback helps employees improve and grow.

When to Request Feedback:

- whenever there is opportunity for growth
- when updating development action progress
- shortly after a team milestone is reached or a project closes
- to gain input about your current or future development priorities

Feedback is time sensitive

Time is of the essence when soliciting feedback. Consider how frequently you should request feedback to maximize your full potential. Don't wait until the end of the year to ask for feedback so V Teamers have time to give you thoughtful feedback.

Ask the right people

Verizon colleagues from a recent project, your manager, mentor, trusted peer or internal client/customer are best positioned to provide honest, well-rounded feedback to help identify themes or patterns to focus on.

Avoid seeking feedback from anyone who hasn't experienced your work directly. Seek feedback from those who are best positioned to provide input to aid in your development. For example, senior leaders that have not seen your work product, or a close friend at work who may find it difficult to be objective, is not recommended. Partner with your manager to align on who would be best positioned to provide meaningful feedback.

Giving Feedback

Giving meaningful and constructive feedback helps employees improve and grow, and is an important part of development of the V Team. Be specific when providing feedback and ensure that you include examples.

Processing feedback

Actively listen and be open to feedback received from your colleagues. Employees and managers should work together to review the feedback in their next development conversation.

Things to consider:

- You can search for “Get Feedback on Self” to create a feedback request or launch a request from the Feedback tab of your profile
- Managers can search for “Get Feedback on Worker” to create a feedback request for their employee or launch a feedback request from the Feedback tab of the employee’s profile
- Try searching for the name of the employee(s) you want to request feedback from
- Feedback questions are part of a standard template and cannot be changed
- When feedback is requested about you (whether requested by you or your manager):
 - Both you and your manager will be notified
 - The feedback will be visible to you and your manager
- If someone has requested that you provide feedback, please complete the request within 10 days of receipt

Who can see feedback in V Team Central?

Feedback in V Team Central is transparent to help managers and employees identify areas of focus for development. Both the manager and employee can see the feedback and who the feedback is from.

No matter who requests feedback, both the employee and the manager will be able to view the feedback that is received. Feedback will include the date the feedback was given, the person who gave the feedback, the question responded too, and the feedback itself.

Both the manager and employee can also see who feedback has been requested from even if the request has not been completed.

Actions	Date	From	Question	Feedback
Q	12/13/2023	 Employee's Photo ...	What does this person do well that should be continued? Please provide specific examples.	Mark is excellent at communicating with stakeholders. During our last project, Mark always kept the client and our teammates involved and informed.
Q	12/13/2023	 Employee's Photo ...	What could this person start doing to be more effective? Please provide specific examples.	To be more effective, Mark could work on delegating. Mark often takes on a higher proportion of tasks than the rest of the team when he is leading a project. Instead, it would be great if Mark asked different people to take on tasks according to their strengths or interests. This would help with team development and morale

Examples of good feedback

Example 1

“As we began to roll out system X, Sarah embraced the changes that impacted our organization as an opportunity to create new possibilities for the team. Sarah volunteered to learn everything she could about the new system, internalized how the system affected our day to day operations and held lunch and learn sessions to help the team understand what was changing and “why” the changes were necessary. Several of Sarah’s colleagues have commented about her positive attitude and invaluable contributions during the project, but found her use of technical terminology to be confusing at times. Sarah was most impactful when she leveraged her skills as a storyteller during the lunch and learn sessions, which I would encourage her to continue to use going forward as the most effective way to transfer this level of knowledge and skill to others.”

Example 2

“Mohammed’s exceptional leadership really stood out on the network technology project. His level of energy and commitment to the team made everyone feel valued and heard. Mohammed’s leadership style created an open platform for others to collaborate and share ideas which ultimately led to a better solution for the company. To be even more effective, Mohammed could promote the use of knowledge-sharing platforms to the broader team to even further increase cross-functional collaboration.”

Example 3

“Marcus really embraced his recent stretch role as Project Manager on the Mid-Atlantic deployment strategy project. His technical skills shined when he developed a new and creative way to use Smartsheets to engage the team. Members of the team mentioned several times how Marcus’ innovative solution really enabled them to be successful in their deliverables, but they also missed the bi-weekly touch base meetings that could have been a great way to communicate to upper management. Marcus’ streamlined technical approach allowed the team to reach milestones ahead of schedule and has become the new PM standard for all future deployment strategies. He can continue to promote these tools and innovative approaches to the broader organization. To ensure the team as a whole is more effective, Marcus could leverage his technical solution combined with a standardized cadence of communication with upper management to really push the limits of the entire team’s success.”
