2025 VZPulse+ Employee Net Promoter Score (eNPS)

The Employee Net Promoter Score (eNPS) measures employee loyalty and satisfaction towards a company. Employees are asked a single question: “On a scale of 0-10, how likely are you to recommend Verizon as a place to work to friends and family?”

How to interpret:

A positive eNPS score (above 0) means you have more Promoters than Detractors, which is a good sign.

A negative score (below 0) means you have more Detractors than Promoters, and you may need to address employee concerns.

The closer the score is to 100, the better, indicating high employee satisfaction and loyalty.

Employee Net Promoter (eNPS) Formula:

- eNPS = % of Promoters - % of Detractors

Example:

- If 60% of your employees are Promoters and 20% are Detractors, your eNPS score is 40 (60 - 20 = 40).

The network?

a. Management

Verizon is doing very well communications and technology. It's great that Verizon is starting to utilize AI tools to help with day to day processes.

a. Management

Working environments for it's employees.

a. Management

Implementing design changes and working to correct past negativity with their customers.

a. Management

We're staying consistent with our values as a company, and our benefits are excellent. I'm proud of our inclusiveness.

a. Management

Verizon does a great job of communication with employees, and pushing for volunteer involvement.

What should Verizon improve?

a. Management

Nothing big comes to mind yet.

a. Management

Verizon is the most financially successful company I've ever worked for, and it's also the cheapest. Stop penny-pinching when it comes to building culture and recognizing hard work. Throw Holiday and Summer parties like a normal company. Let managers take their team out to happy hour and expense it. Team lunches. These things are still far below what the best in class companies like Google offer their employees, and yet Verizon can't even do the bare minimum here.

a. Management

Verizon should improve the cache clear tools that update our web pages such as Akamai system. It has been noticed that updates such as assets and other content on web doesn't get properly updated and it can take multiple times to cache clear/refresh the page in Akamai and/or the SRE portal which can cause delays in launch and affect the overall consumer experience when visiting the vz site.

a. Management

The topmost leadership and board of directors.

a. Management

Verizon should have more employee and contractor appreciation events. We miss those!

a. Management

More transparency and focus on employee growth.

a. Management

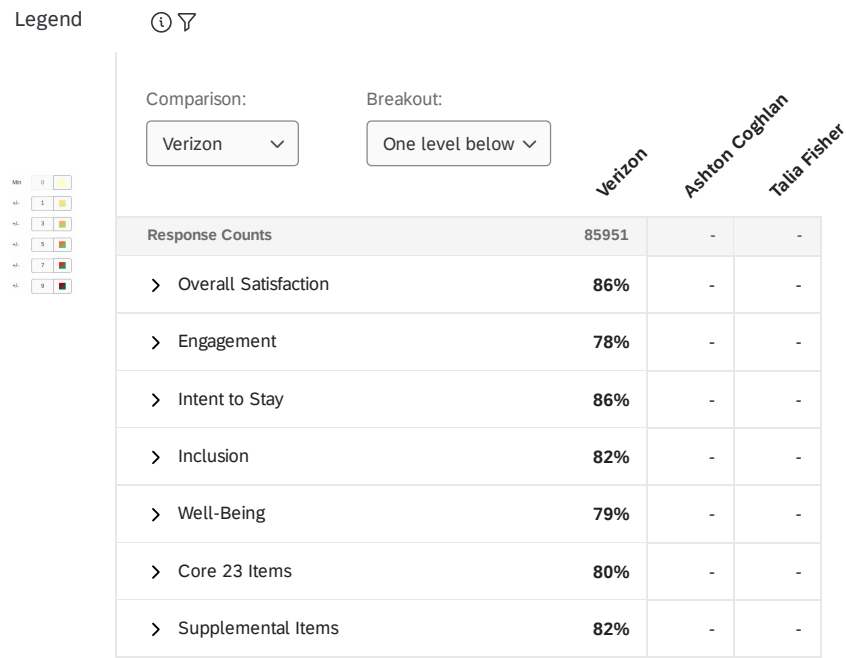

Compensation that takes inflation and rising cost of living into account.

Understanding your VZPulse dashboard

Why is Employee Experience (EX) important?
Simply put, a better employee experience will improve your team's performance! The more motivated, healthier and included people feel, the better outcomes for everyone.

What is the employee experience?

Employee experience can be measured through five key KPIs; Engagement, Overall Satisfaction, Intent to stay, Inclusion and Well-being.

Each KPI has a specific page that you can use to explore in more detail. The EX KPIs are influenced by twenty-three key drivers - these are all aspects of the employee experience that should be regularly monitored.

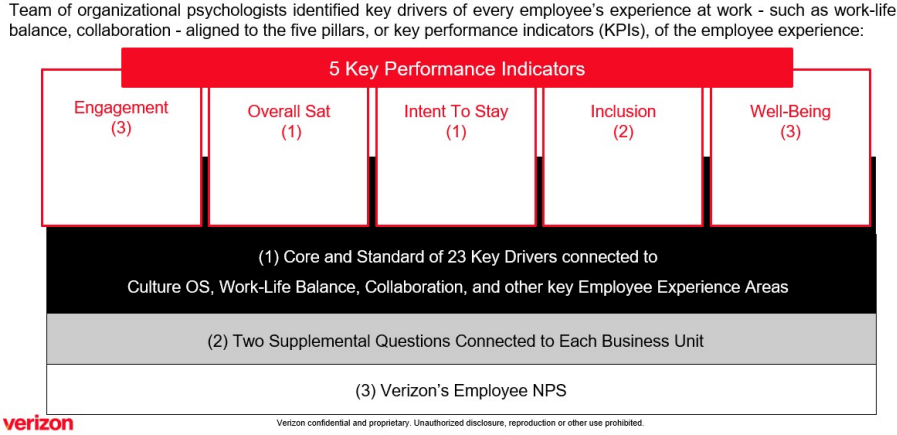

If one of these areas trends downwards, it is a sign that something may need addressing.

The dashboard introduces Employee Net Promoter Score (eNPS) for people leaders at Verizon. This measurement is important because it provides a simple, yet powerful, way to gauge employee engagement, satisfaction, and loyalty, which directly impacts business performance by influencing employee retention, productivity, and customer experience.

How will this dashboard help me?

This dashboard will give you a read on your team's EX, and let you know the top actions to improve it. Following these signals from your people will increase retention, performance and make your team a better place to be.

VZPulse+ Survey Design

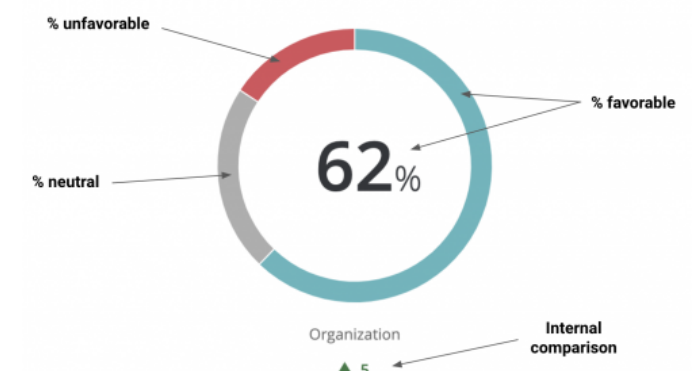

How responses translate into scores

Most items range from strongly agree to strongly disagree. Responses translate exactly into survey scores, either as a horizontal bar chart (above) or vertical bars (to the right). The teal bar shows the percentage of respondents who agreed with the statement.

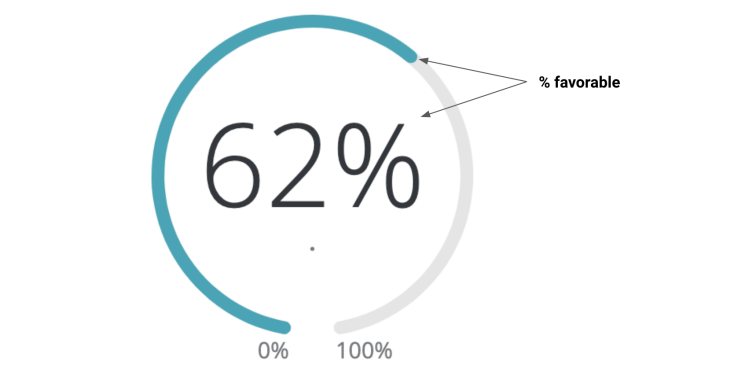

KPI - donut (recommended)

Some KPIs are shown as a donut-style bar. It shows how you compare to another group internally or externally, as well as how the KPI is trending.

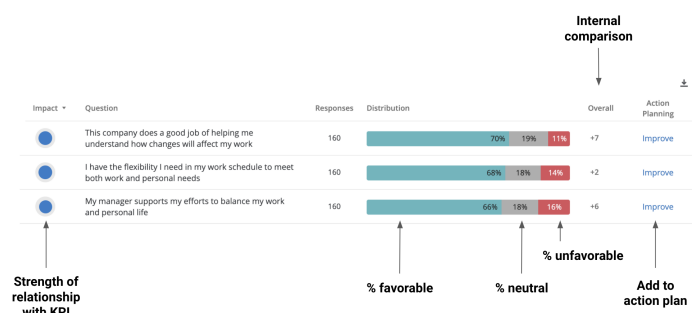

KPI - gauge

Some KPIs are shown as a gauge. Unlike the donut, it only reports the favorable scores, or the percentage of people who agreed with the statement.

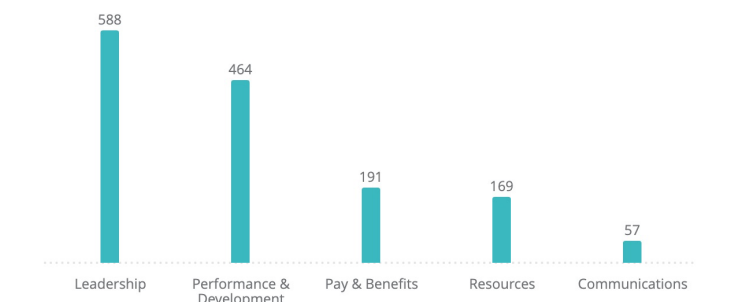

Key driver analysis

An impact indicator at the left of the scorecard shows the result of a Pearson correlation. This analysis indicates the strength of the relationship between the item and the KPI, such as engagement or intent to stay. The larger the blue circle, the stronger the relationship, and therefore the more important the item. Disregard correlations under .5.

Text analytics

We ran automated topic analysis on text feedback from your employees. They talked about the topics shown most frequently. The size of the bars relates to the number of comments.

Organizational hotspots

The heatmap shows different parts of the employee experience by different employee groups. Darker blue boxes are more positive, and darker red boxes are more negative. Horizontal patterns show if certain parts of the employee experience are universally positive or negative. Vertical patterns show if certain groups of employees are having more positive or more negative experiences.

Comparison: Company Overall Breakout: Age

Your operating rhythm for feedback

Through our work with customers, Qualtrics' team of researchers have found a quarterly operating rhythm to be the most effective when it comes to managers and teams acting on their feedback.

We recommend you adopt the working habits shown on the right when reviewing and discussing results with your team. This will give you all time to huddle and discuss, and tweak your actions to accommodate the latest feedback.
